Cerner, Massachusetts firm will develop Web-based product

Cerner Corp. and Wellogie will jointly offer a Web-based system to give doctors more flexible access to patient information, Cerner announced late Thursday.

Financial terms of the deal were not disclosed.

In a written statement, Kansas City-based Cerner (Nasdaq: CERN) said it will integrate its MillenniumObjects product with Wellogie's Consult application. Consult is a clinical work-flow management system based on Web standards that allows hospitals to offer their affiliated physicians access to patient records anywhere a Web browser is available. Cerner will provide marketing support for this additional product, which securely connects hospitals and affiliated practice clinics.

The new product will be available to the outpatient and affiliated practice markets by the first quarter of 2003. Cerner will add the product to its catalog of offerings. Privately held Wellogie, based in Cambridge, Mass., will offer the new product and MillenniumObjects development consulting services to its clients.

"Physicians want access to their patients' electronic medical records, and health care organizations want access to physicians," Cerner President Trace Devanny said in a statement.

Cerner ranks No. 18 on The Business Journal's Top 25 list of area public companies and No. 25 on its Top 100 list of area employers.
